CONFERENCE THEME AND SIGNIFICANCE

In light of the economic and social transformations witnessed by the world and the challenges associated with them, sustainable development has become an urgent imperative aimed at enhancing economic empowerment, job creation, and harnessing the potential of families and communities. Among the key productive units that can contribute to income generation, reducing poverty, and strengthening social cohesion are "productive families". In this context, the Algerian state has shown significant interest in supporting this type of social initiative through the Executive Decree No. 25-236, which sets out the conditions and procedures for benefiting from the Family Support Program for Productive Families.

Productive families represent an economic model that bridges the gap between the social and economic dimensions, as they contribute to achieving material well-being while enabling individuals and families to be productive, creative, and self-reliant. This model is particularly important in light of current developments and the urgent need to activate local development opportunities through diversifying sources of national income.

It is therefore essential to shed light on the economic and social components of productive families, identify their challenges and opportunities, their strengths and weaknesses, and explore practical and effective ways to support and empower them in order to contribute to poverty reduction and the improvement of living conditions, while ensuring consistency with social and legal requirements.

CONFERENCE PROBLEM STATEMENT

Despite the growing importance of productive families, they continue to face a range of legal, economic, and social challenges, including inadequate legal regulation, limited access to financing and support, insufficient expertise in marketing and management, as well as social challenges relating to the economic status of individuals within the family and society.

Accordingly, the central problem addressed by the conference revolves around examining the extent to which the legal framework governing productive families is capable of achieving a balance between the requirements of legal protection and the imperatives of economic sustainability, and the extent to which this balance affects the effectiveness of the productive family model as a tool for economic and social development.

CONFERENCE OBJECTIVES

- 01 To define the concept of productive families, their various forms, and their role in society.
- 02 To clarify the legal significance of productive families and the legal framework governing and protecting their rights.
- 03 To highlight the economic contribution of productive families in increasing household income, reducing unemployment, and promoting local development.
- 04 To analyze the economic and social challenges faced by productive families and explore appropriate solutions.
- 05 To examine international experiences in supporting productive families and identify successful policies and practices that may be adapted locally.
- 06 To propose recommendations aimed at strengthening productive families and ensuring the sustainability of their activities in support of comprehensive development.
